About This Game

Unlike in traditional twin stick shooters, in Particle Mace, you destroy your enemies by swinging giant boulders at your enemies. It takes a deep understanding of your own weight, thrust, and inertia in order to be a master Particle Mace gladiator, but once you get in the zone, this game satisfies like no other.

PARTICLE MACE is a game about capturing the thrill of classic arcade games with a new, physics based mechanic.

PARTICLE MACE is a game about trying not to die, but that's impossible.

PARTICLE MACE is explosive arcade fun for 1-4 players that pays homage to twitch games of the past, but replaces the typical guns with an unruly physics-based weapon. Take control of a tiny ship in an extremely hostile universe, and defend yourself as long as possible from enemy ships and asteroids using a collection of trash particles tethered to the ship. To survive, you must carefully navigate around the many hazards while building up momentum to swing your weapon into your foes or your friends, all in a field of brightly abstracted visuals and an entrancing procedural background.

There's an interesting idea here, but it's not that incredible. It feels really dated now, like a slapped-together exe. Most modern controllers will not register correctly, which means the local co-op and deathmatch modes are unlikely to work unless you have old 360 controllers.

The gameplay is just swinging around a mace to hit space objects. Grind to progress missions and unlock ships with weirder physics. There are no powerups or specials to make it interesting. There are better scoreboard games out there, and the leaderboards have been trashed for years now. I can't recommend it.
